National Guard Seeks Maximum Camp Attendance

Michigan National Guardsmen are training their sights on a record-breaking 1957 field training attendance. Major General George C. Moran, The Adjutant General of Michigan, announced today.

To help them hit the target, Guardsmen have begun their annual campaign to acquaint their employers with the necessity for adequate military leave policies.

General Moran has initiated the campaign by addressing personal letters to secretaries of Chamber of Commerce in 55 communities supporting Guard units and to executives of trade associations. He has asked their assistance in advising employers of 1957 field training dates and of the need for favorable military leave policies.

Attendance at 1957 field training may approach the 14,000 mark. Current strength of the Michigan National Guard is 13,927 officers and men. A total of 12,444 officers and men, or 95.13 per cent of the assigned strength, attended 1956 field training.

DESIGNED FOR THE FUTURE

LONG LIFE WITH

Concrete

If paved with concrete, the roads of the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways will last longer... at least 50 years, and provide the smoothest, safest, most comfortable highway ride ever.

The heavy traffic expected on these vital roads demands pavement of proven durability. That's long-lasting concrete.

Concrete highways have a gritty texture which helps prevent skids and gives tires a better grip for quick stops. Smooth-fitting concrete is free of washboard bumps, rutting, or wavy surface. For driving that is easier and safer, concrete pavement is first choice.

Our Federal Budget . . .

Herbert Hoover has said, "Our federal budgeting and accounting is not adapted to today's enormous expenditures. Two things have resulted. No one can tell what the actual expenditures of the Government really are, and for this reason, and the continuing appropriations, Congress has lost control of the purse—the very foundation of free men."

A newsletter published by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York goes into this matter in some detail, under the title "Is the Budget Out of Control?" The answer to that question, apparently, is at least a qualified Yes. The reason lies largely in the method by which each annual budget is prepared. It is a method that might be fairly workable in a smaller and simpler enterprise than the U. S. government. But it is a method that is something very different when applied to a government that has more than 100 departments and agencies, employs more than 2,360,000 civilians, and spends around $70 billion a year.

The Executive branch of the government prepares a budget and then submits it to the Congress. So far so good. But the trouble, in the newsletter's words, is that the Executive budget is a vast aggregate of specific requests by many officials, most of whom are enthusiastic believers in the functions and programs which they respectively administer. Human nature being what it is, practically all of these officials want to do things on an ever-increasing scale. Thus, to quote the newsletter again, "This constant pressure for higher rather than lower expenditure can be effectively resisted by the President only in so far as he is prepared to act against the recommendations of his own agents and is equipped to do so intelligently by intimate knowledge of the agents' operations." Inasmuch as these operations cover almost every activity known to modern man, it is obvious that neither the President nor the experts in the Budget Bureau are in a position to do this effectively.

Congress is in even a worse position. It doesn't have specialized staffs for guidance and suggestion. It votes for or against bills as they come along, on a piecemeal basis—not as part of a cohesive-over-all program. Then, to further complicate matters, and to further impair control of the budget, Congress has adopted the habit of approving major spending programs covering periods of years. Thus, each year the money the government spends includes a large proportion of "carryover" funds voted in past years.

And this isn't the end of the problem. There are still other important areas of expenditure which are now either absolutely or practically beyond effective Congressional year-in and year-out control. These include interest on the national debt, treaty obligations, aid to veterans and other groups, etc. Also, there is a hesitancy to tamper with national defense requirements. In a survey published in December of 1952, the Tax Foundation actually showed that only 6 per cent of the budget was subject to really total control.

The Guaranty Trust's letter proposes a solution to all this in the form of a really effective "legislative budget." The Executive budget would be maintained. But, in addition, Congress would list its own estimates of receipts and expenditures, and adopt a legislative procedure designed to hold actual appropriations in line with those estimates. The letter presents four primary considerations: (1) that an annual legislative budget be drawn up, (2) that it be drawn up with the aid of a specialized staff, (3) that it be drawn up and approved early in the session so that no appropriations will be made except in accordance with it, and (4) that appropriations be made (as recommended by the Hoover commission) for a single fiscal year only, irrespective of real or supposed commitments, so that all proposed appropriations will be subjected to critical Congressional scrutiny each year.
